9	Charu Sagar	Delhi	Corneal Intraepithelial lesion (CIN) : The Great Masquerade Corneal Intraepithelial Neoplasms (CIN) are premalignant lesions usually showing conjunctival and limbal involvement. We report a rare case of isolated CIN. Clinical case : A 62 yr old female presented with gradual diminution of vision, foreign body sensation in left eye for past 1 year, her BCVA was 6/60 in left eye, her right eye examination was unremarkable. She had received treatment for dry eyes, vortex keratopathy, herpetic keratopathy for 1 year but without improvement. On slit lamp examination cornea showed elevated, irregular translucent corneal plaque with fimbriated margin along with feeder vessels . ASOCT was done which demonstrated thickened hyperreflective epithelium with an abrupt transition between abnormal and normal epithelium suggestive of CIN. Excisional biopsy was done and Bandage Contact lens was put. Post Op day 1 cornea was clear. On histopathology, specimen reported Corneal intraepithelial neoplasia. Patient was started on topical interferon alfa-2b (1 million units/ml) four times a day. No recurrences have been seen after 6 months of follow up. Conclusion: Timely diagnosis and management of CIN results in good prognosis
